Izvleček
This paper discusses the association of the Croatian war veterans with mental disorders from World War II. It is based on an analysis of the psychiatric patient files of soldiers who were treated in two Croatian psychiatric hospitals from 1919 to 1924. Their process of social reintegration into the community after the war was analyzed. The intention was to research whether this circumstance had an influence regarding the gender role of men. The intention was to research whether this circumstance in part influenced their deviant behaviour. The results show that the men did not change their family roles and corresponding care for their dependents as a result of which they were socially excluded from their home communities.

SPARC Europe Setting the Default to Open

The Open Access Citation Advantage Service (OACA)

Home - What We Do - Open Access - SPARC Europe Open Access Resources - The Open Access Citation Advantage Service (OACA)

The OpCit project has for many years kept a list of studies up to date on whether or not there is a citation advantage for Open Access articles.

SPARC Europe then updated it in 2015 here: List of studies until 2015.

In 2010, a summary of all the studies to date was also published. SPARC Europe updated the lists of studies, some comparative details of their methodologies, and their findings. The summary of study results (until 2015) can be found here: Summary of studies until 2015.

This table summarises the findings:

Total number of studies until 2015	70
Studies that found a citation advantage	46
Studies that found no citation advantage	17
Studies that were inconclusive, found non-significant data or measured other things than citation advantage for articles	7

The OpCit project's work was highly valued and SPARC Europe was pleased to continue to capture that value for users and to help share experience on citations and OA.

In 2016 SPARC Europe decided not to further update The Open Access Citation Advantage Service since the citation advantage evidence has now become far more common knowledge to our authors.

We discuss the potential implications of these results for authors (researchers) and journal publishers who make the effort of sharing their data in repositories. Description

The EIRENE project's purpose is to think afresh 20th-century post-war transitions by taking into account a gendered perspective. Namely, the historiographic consideration of gender thoroughly alters the understanding of social dynamics in modern Europe. The project will focus on the North-Eastern Adriatic Region, an overlooked European space, marked by border redefinitions, changes of political systems, and high interethnic conflict intensity, but also by genuine cooperation among ethnic groups. The region has all the qualities of a "laboratory environment" for the study of gender positions and interrelations after World War II...
